CONTENT AND OPERATION

Operation of the bill

Overview

The bill enacts a new chapter in the Revised Code, Chapter 2741. The chapter creates a "right of publicity" in an individual's "persona," meaning that a person has a property right in their own individual set of unique characteristics that they may both use for a commercial purpose and prohibit others from using for a commercial purpose. The Chapter allows the right of publicity to be both transferable and descendible, creates a cause of action for the unauthorized commercial use of an individual's persona, and provides a four-year statute of limitations for the cause of action. In addition, the terms defined for the Chapter include "persona," "commercial purpose," "name," "news reporting or entertainment medium," "right of publicity," and "trier of fact."

Right to the use of an individual's persona for commercial purposes

Under the bill, a person may not, without permission, use any aspect of another individual's (the target) persona for a commercial purpose during the target individual's lifetime or for a period of 100 years after the date of the target individual's death. A person is permitted to use a target individual's persona for a commercial purpose during the target individual's lifetime and for a period not to exceed 100 years after the date of the target individual's death if the person first obtains the written consent to use the target individual's persona from a specified person (see "Persons authorized to consent to the use of a persona," below). (R.C. 2741.02(A) and (B).)

The bill requires a person to obtain the consent to use the target individual's persona regardless of whether the target individual uses, authorizes, had used, or had authorized the use of their own persona for a commercial purpose during the target individual's lifetime and after the death of the target individual requires that the consent be obtained from the specified person who owns that right of publicity. Unless otherwise provided for in an agreement between a person who had the right to grant consent to use the target individual's persona and a person who received consent to use the target individual's right of publicity, the consent obtained before the death of the target individual remains valid after the target individual's death. (R.C. 2741.02(B).)

Coverage of the chapter

Except as otherwise provided in the bill (see "Exceptions to the chapter," below), the bill provides that the new chapter on "persona" that it creates applies only to the following: (1) the right of publicity in the persona of the target individual whose domicile or residence is in this state on or after the bill becomes effective, (2) the right of publicity in the persona of a target individual who died on or after January 1, 1898, and whose domicile or residence on their date of death was in this state, and (3) an act or event that infringes upon a target individual's right of publicity and that occurs within this state on or after the bill becomes effective, regardless of the target individual's domicile or residence (R.C. 2741.03).

Allowable means to grant or transfer consent to use the target individual's right of publicity

The bill provides that the right of publicity in the target individual's persona is a property right that is freely transferable and descendible, in whole or in part, by any of the following means: (1) contract, (2) license, (3) gift, (4) trust, (5) will, or (6) intestate succession. The intestate succession law that applies is the applicable intestate succession law of the state administering the majority of the real and personal property of the target individual who died intestate, regardless of whether that state recognizes the right of publicity as a property right. (R.C. 2741.04.)

Persons authorized to consent to the use of a persona

Unless otherwise expressly provided in an agreement transferring an aspect of an individual's right of publicity, only the following persons may grant consent to use the target individual's persona for commercial use: (1) a person or persons, including the target individual, who collectively owns more than 50% of the right of publicity, subject to the terms of any other existing licenses regarding that right of publicity, and (2) a person, including a licensee of the individual's right of publicity, who is expressly authorized in writing to grant consent by a person named in (1), above.

A person specified in (1) or (2), above, may do both of the following: (1) grant a person consent to use all or part of a target individual's right of publicity and (2) limit, restrict, or place conditions on how a person to whom consent is granted may use the target individual's right of publicity. (R.C. 2741.05.)

Civil actions for improper use of an individual's persona: liability and the statute of limitations

A person who improperly uses a target individual's persona is liable under the bill in a civil action to the person injured by that improper use for both of the following: (1) monetary damages in the amount of $10,000 or actual damages, whichever is greater and (2) at the election of the injured person, treble damages or, if applicable under existing law, punitive or exemplary damages. When assessing damages under (1), the trier of fact must include any profits a person derived from the unauthorized commercial use of the target individual's persona in calculating the award of actual damages. Each party to the action has the right to a jury trial of the action, to be asserted pursuant to the Rules of Civil Procedure. (R.C. 2741.07(A) and (B).)

Under the bill, an action for improper persona use must be brought within four years after a person with the right to the persona (see "Persons authorized to consent to the use of a persona," above), has actual knowledge of a violation of the law regulating the use of an individual's persona (R.C. 2741.07(C)).

Civil actions for improper use of an individual's persona: remedies

The bill provides that a court, when an improper use of an individual's persona is found, may do any of the following: (1) award the prevailing party reasonable attorney's fees, court costs, and reasonable expenses associated with the civil action, (2) order temporary or permanent injunctive relief, and (3) order the impoundment, on terms the court deems reasonable, of both of the following during the pendency of the civil action: (a) products, merchandise, goods, or other materials alleged to have been made or used improperly and (b) plates, molds, matrices, masters, tapes, negatives, digital recordings, electronic media, or other items from which products, merchandise, goods, or other materials may be manufactured or reproduced. As part of a final judgment, a court may order the destruction or other reasonable disposition of items described in (3), above. (R.C. 2741.07(D) and (E).)

The bill also provides that the remedies provided for in the bill are in addition to any other remedies provided for by state or federal statute or common law (R.C. 2741.08).

Civil actions for improper use of an individual's persona: who may bring the action

The bill permits the following persons to bring a civil action to enforce the rights set forth above: (1) a person or persons, including the target individual, who collectively own all of the right of publicity at issue, subject to any licenses regarding that right of publicity, (2) a person, including a licensee of a target individual's right of publicity, who is expressly authorized in writing by the owner or owners of the right of publicity at issue to bring a civil action, and (3) unless otherwise expressly provided in an authorized agreement and subject to a right of objection discussed below, a person to whom ownership or any portion of ownership of an individual's right of publicity has been transferred. (R.C. 2741.06(A).)

Before bringing a civil action, a person who owns less than all of a target individual's right of publicity must notify the target individual, if living, by regular mail addressed to the last known address of that individual. The person also must notify any persons to whom the target individual's right of publicity has been transferred of the proposed civil action by the following means: (1) regular mail addressed to the last known address of each transferee and (2) if the address of the transferee is not known, by publication in a newspaper of general circulation in the county where the target individual resides or, in the case of a deceased target individual, in the county where the target individual's estate has been or would have been admitted to probate. The target individual and any person to whom ownership of that target individual's right of publicity has been transferred may object to the proposed civil action within 20 days from the date of the mailing of the notice or 60 days from the date of publication by giving written notice of the objection to the person proposing the civil action. If the target individual or other eligible person does not timely object to the civil action, the objection is forever barred. A person may not bring a civil action under the bill if an objection is made to the civil action by the target individual or other persons who collectively own more than 50% of the target individual's right of publicity. (R.C. 2741.06(B) and (C).)

Under the bill, a person, other than a licensee of the target individual's right of publicity, who owns less than all of the right of publicity at issue, who brings a civil action under the bill, and who is successful in the action must compensate any other person owning an interest in that right of publicity in amounts proportionate to the other person's interest with respect to any net recovery in a civil action less the person's costs of collection and reasonable attorney's fees (R.C. 2741.06(D)).

Exceptions to the chapter

The new chapter that regulates the use of an individual's persona does not apply to any of the following (R.C. 2741.09(A)):

(1) The use of an aspect of an individual's persona in any of the following media if that use does not convey or reasonably suggest that the individual endorses the work, composition, or program involved: (a) the internet, on-line computer services, and similar means of electronic transmission of information, literary works, theatrical works, musical compositions, film, videotape, photographs, radio, or television programs to the extent that the usage of an aspect of the individual's persona is permitted under the Ohio Constitution or the United States Constitution, (b) material that has political or newsworthy value, and (c) original works of fine art;

(2) The use of an individual's persona in promotional materials, commercial announcements, or advertisements for a news reporting or entertainment medium that satisfies all of the following criteria: (a) the promotional materials, commercial announcements, or advertisements use all or part of a past edition of the medium's own broadcast or publication containing aspects of the individual's persona, (b) the promotional materials, commercial announcements, or advertisements do not convey or reasonably suggest that the individual endorses the news reporting or entertainment medium, and (c) the promotional materials, commercial announcements, or advertisements promote, announce, or advertise an aspect of the individual's persona that is excluded under (2)(a), above;

(3) The use of an individual's name to truthfully identify the individual as the author of a written work or the performer of a recorded performance under circumstances in which the written work or the recorded performance is otherwise lawfully reproduced, exhibited, or broadcast;

(4) The use of an aspect of an individual's persona in connection with the broadcast or reporting of an event or topic of general or public interest.

The bill further provides that a person who holds a copyright and who authorizes a person to reproduce, perform, display, prepare derivative works of, or distribute copies of a copyrighted work does not convey to that person the right of publicity in the persona of an individual depicted in that work unless the person who holds the copyright has obtained the right of publicity or consent to use the right of publicity from a person authorized to give that consent. The bill states that the new chapter on the use of an individual's persona does not affect rights or privileges recognized under the Ohio Constitution or the United States Constitution with respect to a news reporting or entertainment medium. (R.C. 2741.09(B) and (C).)
