Fiscal effect: This provision is part of the bill's package of criminal sentencing reforms. This package of reforms may not have an immediate effect in terms of reducing the Department of Rehabilitation and Correction's institutional operating expenses. Some savings may not be realized for several years. The net effect of these other related criminal sentencing reform provisions will, through FY 2015, reduce the need for several thousand inmate beds and result in a total savings of about $77.9 million in expenditures related to incarceration. Some of these sentencing reform provisions will shift offenders to one or more community control sanctions increasing demand on local community control sanction systems. This could in turn increase the local demand for DRC's community corrections grants funding. As a result, the annual savings in state incarceration costs will be partially offset by the need to enhance funding for its parole and community services operations.
